Leverage their Non-Licensed SUD Workforce

50-State Scan: How Medicaid Agencies Leverage their Non-Licensed SUD Workforce NASHP conducted a 50-state scan to learn how Medicaid agencies are deploying non-licensed, substance use disorder (SUD) staff—including peers, counselors, and other qualified staff—to address the professional staff shortages by supplementing licensed provider capacity with this growing workforce. This comprehensive report details how states certify, pay for, and supervise this non-licensed workforce and it provides resources to help states develop new approaches to increase their SUD treatment capacity.

MA and NY Tackle Disparities with Behavioral Health Workforce Innovations

Racial and ethnic inequities in health care affect individuals’ outcomes and increase costs. This is especially pronounced for those with behavioral health conditions. In this report, NASHP examines how Massachusetts and New York are incorporating community health workers and credentialed family peer advocates respectively into their redesigned payment and delivery systems and using regulatory levers, such as training and certification requirements, in ways that can address these disparities.

States Increase Access to Oral Health Services and Support Overall Health

Across the nation, states are developing innovative approaches to increase access to oral health services. These policies underscore the critical relationship between overall health and oral health. This blog and two new fact sheets explore how states, including Wisconsin and Arizona, are expanding their oral health workforce to increase access to care and promote health equity and patient safety.

Dissemination Center Highlights State Policies to Support Family Caregivers

November is National Family Caregivers Month, a recognition that caregivers are crucial partners with states in providing long-term services. NASHP recently launched the Recognition, Assist, Include, Support, and Engage (RAISE) Family Caregiver Resource and Information Center to celebrate the MA and NY Tackle Disparities with Behavioral Health Workforce Innovations with Hartford Foundation, supported by the David and Lucile Packard Foundation.
